A real camping trip to California and back, by auto.

"Flat-out one of the most interesting books I've read in years. To say that a book about California might rank with Kevin Starr's Americans and the California Dream or Mike Davis' City of Quartz is dangerously high praise, but I think Axelrod's book may someday be in that league."—John Ganim, University of California, Riverside "Inventing Autopia thoughtfully weaves together planning and policy history with cultural history to great effect. It is sure to change our understanding of the ways in which Los Angeles not only grew and developed but envisioned itself in the era."—William Devereil, author of Whitewashed Adobe: The Rise of Los Angeles and the Remaking of Its Mexican Past

This work explores the history of tourism in the American West and examines its effects on both the tourists and the places and people they visit. Scholars join government and National Park Service professionals to investigate the dilemmas that tourism poses for western communities, from economic and environmental questions to cultural change.

In 1892, Stephen Merritt, a New York City minister, embarked on a summer tour to California and Alaska, traveling in private Pullman railcars and stopping at many noted attractions, including Yellowstone and Yosemite National Parks. In his journal, Merritt chronicled his trip as a patriotic ritual of citizenship. Half a century later Jack Kerouac stuck out his thumb to catch a ride to California, in search of a "real" America of workers, farmers, and tramps, and described his travels as a personal rite of passage in On the Road. In See America First, Marguerite Shaffer chronicles the birth of modern American tourism between 1880 and 1940, linking tourism to the simultaneous growth of national transportation systems, print media, a national market, and a middle class with money and time to spend on leisure. Focusing on the See America First slogan and idea employed at different times by railroads, guidebook publishers, Western boosters, and Good Roads advocates, she describes both the modern marketing strategies used to promote tourism and the messages of patriotism and loyalty embedded in the tourist experience. She shows how tourists as consumers participated in the search for a national identity. Generously illustrated, See America First demonstrates that the promotion and consumption of tourist experiences were central to the development of an American identity.

During the '20s, Southern California became the most heavily motorized area on earth--with automobile registration increasing five times as fast as the population. Dr. Brilliant discusses the human, technological, aesthetic, and ecological effects the region experienced while embracing mobility as one of life's highest values.
